didn't wish to take care of the unwanted child. Near the age of 6, Lexandre's parents were killed by Alonso Wiley's debt collectors for not paying the debt. He was then raised by a prostitute, who took care of him until he aged and was capable of living independently. The boy started to develop a special connection towards his new mother, so he even playfully claimed that he would buy her a house in Toussaint. However, the prostitute, named Anna, still couldn't fully provide for Lexandre, so she taught and encouraged him to steal. Therefore, from an early age, the boy had to commit crimes to survive in the harsh streets of Novigrad. At the age of 9, he formed a small criminal group, mostly composed of troubled teenagers who wished to live with thievery.

Once, Lexandre and his group decided to rob another unsuspecting victim, who, unfortunately for the group, was a witcher. Teenagers have taken the witcher's attention, with Lexandre trying to pickpocket him. However, the monster-slayer quickly reacted and grabbed Lexandre's hand. The boy was shocked by the inhuman reaction of the mutant and realized that he had made a big mistake in attempting to pickpocket him. The witcher saw potential in the boy, seeing as Lexandre was too brave and reckless for his own good. After that, the monster-slayer decided to take the young Lexandre with him. The group refused to let him go; however, as soon as they were given money, they let him go. Before the mutant took the young boy with him, Lexandre asked the witcher the last thing to do before they leave; it was for him going back to his mother to give her some money. The witcher listened to Lexandre's plea and followed him to the brothel. As soon as Anna saw her son with the monster-slayer, she realized it was no good to negotiate, and asked Lexandre to grow up proud. The boy's new mentor then took him to the School with him. The witcher was revealed to be a member of the School of the Cat by a silver circular medallion with a cat engraved on it .

Life at the Dyn Marv caravan

The witcher has brought Lexandre to the caravan, where he went through the infamous Trial of the Grasses. The mutations weren't quite successful, leaving his face scarred, as if it were burned. Lexandre was deeply scarred by this; thus, he decided to obscure his face with a mask and hood. The continued trials caused his psyche to be fractured. Just like many other feline witchers, he developed rage issues, sadomasochist tendencies, and violence. This caused him to be disillusioned by his fate and frustrated by the grandmaster of the school, Guxart. Lexandre's frustration has led him to befriend some of the witchers who were equally frustrated by Guxart and their fate, such as D´yaebl and Loathen. Due to Lexandre's delusion, he would constantly mock and beat some of his younger brethren, like the time he attempted to lead the whole school against Muneera and Kiyan's romance, or times when he would constantly attempt to beat up Jolanta Dinmarb, seeing her as Guxart's "lapdog".

Moreover, when Tubiel of Brenna, who used to be a Griffin School member, started the training under Gwidon, Lexandre also started to feel hatred towards the new member due to her past connections with the School the Cat conflict with. He would continiously insult and sometimes beat her, which would make the young girl fall into recession, making her think she wasn't even worthy of becoming a Cat Witcher. When he became fed up with her, he once againt attempted to assault her, which caused him to conflict with her mentor. What Gwidon didn't see however, is that Lexandre wouldn't dare to kill another witcher. And during one of the heated arguments, Lexandre killed the girl's mentor, and hid the body.

The fall of Dyn Marv, and the death of Guxart

Due to his rising wrath and hatred for his line of work, Lexandre continued to clash with his brethren during the rest of the 13th century, in 1269, the Grandmaster himself has confronted him because of his impatience. Lexandre made an effort to explain that he wanted to live a tranquil life in Toussaint and that he didn't want to carry on living the life of a monster-slayer. Guxart was incensed by Lexandre's "whim" and clarified that their only goal was to kill monsters and live on The Path. The remarks made by his mentor infuriated Lexandre. He didn't show the hatred until he would start the conspiracy. He killed Guxart in his sleep, relishing in his own and D´yaebl's hatred, as he hid the body. He also made a secret agreement with the Nilfgaardian Secret Service, giving them a chance to take over the school, in exchange for a peaceful life in their world.

He led his friends and several like-minded people against the school and attacked his brethren. Nilfgaardian soldiers saw the opportunity to capture the school; however, they stabbed Lexandre's group in the back, motivated by some of the Cats being mercenaries on the side of Northern Realms during the Battle of Brenna. So the defending Cats had to fight an unfair fight. While in the fight, he was scarred by Dragonfly, who burned the left side of his face and eye. Dragonfly attempted to defend and succeeded at saving Joël, Jolanta, and Pardus of Korath.

After the fall of the caravan, Lexandre stole the diagrams and escaped.

Later years and death

> "It was worth it. Worth killing my friends, worth stealing diagrams that cost Guxart's life, WORTH ANYTHING!.. Just to escape this miserable life on the Path."

Until 1274, Lexandre was hunted by the defenders of the school who wished to avenge the death of Guxart, and other members killed during the takeover such as Axel, and Cedric. Lexandre was caught up by Joël, who was scarred by his betrayal, Joël however, didn't have the courage to kill him; thus, he have let Lexandre go. Although Joël said that if he meets Lexandre again, he will kill him. To prove Lexandre's supposed death, Joël took his medallion to tell his surviving brethren about his death.

Lexandre moved to Toussaint, there he met Bartolomé de Launay, the ducal armorer, to provide him with the blueprints in exchange for an enormous payment and a full suit of ducal armor. While agreeing to the deal, de Launay was skeptical of the witcher and arranged a meeting near the ruins of the Arthach Palace, where he would have received protection from the infamous Antoine Straggen and his bandit hansa. Sensing the risk, Lexandre decisively concealed part of the blueprints in the dangerous Pits of Brume, a place he knew could only be accessed by a witcher or someone with a similar level of skill.

At first, the exchange appeared to proceed according to plan when Lexandre arrived at the Arthach Palace Ruins. But he accidentally shared the location of the remaining diagrams during the meeting. Straggen's hanse betrayed them, when they realized they could steal the gold and the diagrams. They used a crossbow to shoot and kill de Launay. Lexandre was hit as well; however, he survived the initial attack. The bandits then attempted to torture the witcher for their own twisted enjoyment; however, Lexandre was broken due to the recent events, and thus he started to hysterically laugh. The bandits, who were terrified by this, killed Lexandre. Later, they burned the body and dumped it.

Trivia

- Lexandre's burned body can be found in the game on which Geralt will remark on by saying: "Damn, tortured him."
- Lexandre has eyeliner under his eyes.
- His burnt face after Dragonfly's Igni sign regenerated back.
- Lexandre killed at least 2 witchers, who were Guxart, the Grandmaster of the School of the Cat, and Gwidon a renegade witcher from School of the Wolf, who later became a Cat and was a mentor of Tubiel of Brenna. Moreover, due to him leading an uprising against the School with the help of Nilfgaardian forces, Axel and Cedric died in an attempt to protect the survivors, which counts as Lexandre killing 4 witchers in total.
